PDC RANKS FIRST AMONG 50 STATES IN NATIONAL SURVEY

Olympia – Washington's Public Disclosure Commission has again topped all 50 states in a national survey of disclosure requirements and public access to information. This marks the 3rd year in a row that Washington is the national leader.

In a report, released yesterday by the Campaign Disclosure Project, Washington ranked first in the nation in a comprehensive analysis of the disclosure of candidate campaign finance information. Florida ranked second.

The PDC received a top grade in all four subcategories assessed in the national survey.

The areas assessed were Campaign Disclosure Law (A-), Electronic Filing Program (A+), Disclosure Content Accessibility (A+) and Online Contextual & Technical Usability (B-).

The Campaign Disclosure Project was conducted by the UCLA School of Law, the Center for Governmental Studies, and the California Voter Foundation and supported by The Pew Charitable Trusts.

Executive Director of the PDC, Vicki Rippie, said she was pleased that the Commission continues to receive national recognition for its work and for the state of Washington.

The number one national ranking for disclosure of candidate campaign finance information comes after three prior surveys in which the Public Disclosure Commission has come out on top. The PDC received the top national score for the disclosure of Personal Financial Affairs information by candidates and elected officials, ranked number one in Lobbyist disclosure law and the Commission received the highest national rating for ballot measure disclosure.

All three national studies evaluated the comprehensiveness of each state's statutes, timeliness of disclosure, thoroughness of financial information, and ease of public access to disclosure information.

Rippie said the national rankings only illustrates that Washington has one of the most comprehensive disclosure laws in the nation.

"These top national rankings proves once again that even small agencies can conduct the people's business in a professional, efficient and cost effective manner", Rippie said.
